Letter from the Chair

This fall semester has been a very busy one at ILS. We hosted the international Document Academy at the end of September, featuring speakers from ten different countries and with the keynote speaker, Maurizio Ferraris from the University of Turin in Italy speaking on media documentation. We also hosted a seminar series on information, ethics, and sociotechnical values, with speakers such as Ferraris, Neal Thomas of the University of North Carolina Chapel Hill speaking on the philosophy and social politics of knowledge graphs in social computing, and Eden Medina of our sister department of Informatics speaking on digital evidence in forensic investigations of wrongful deaths during the Chilean military dictatorship. We also hosted two speakers in Professionals in Practice series, Mara Inglezakis-Owens speaking on how to find a good job after graduation and Erin Dobias from Google. This coming spring, we will host Geoffrey Bowker from UC-Irvine as our Kaser lecturer, Emilee Mathews, a digital art librarian, also from UC-Irvine, in our professionals in practice series, and other speakers.

We also have been busy, with the help of a new staff hire, Jesse Elkins, and with Katie Novak in our office, at organizing a new Student Advisory Council, and doing better work through Jesse and our Associate Chair, Carol Choksy, at supporting students in their internships. Through Carol, Professor Howard Rosenbaum, and Katie Novak and a host of student assistants, we have been busy preparing for our ALA reaccreditation in the spring of 2019. And through Howard (who is the Graduate Program Director) and student advisor and scheduler, Corey Tarbell, we have been working on more advance planning for the class schedule than in the recent past.

Stephanie Smith and Corey in our office have also been working on student recruiting and outreach, with virtual interviews now possible with prospective students.

ILS is also now in the midst of a search for a new full-time faculty member. We have received applications from Europe, Asia, Africa, and North America, with many extraordinary applicants.

Associate Professor John Walsh has taken over the leadership of the Haithi Trust Research Center, a very important, inter-university, role in an important digital collection.

ILS Bids Farewell to Wells

The Department of Information & Library Science moved out of Wells Library this semester after having been located there for forty-eight years. Prior to 1969, the then titled Graduate Library School was located in the Education building. Upon moving into the newly constructed Main Library, the Alumni Newsletter from 1969 reported, “Indiana University’s new $14 million library, which was occupied in June, provides quarters on its ground floor for the Graduate Library School. Materials were moved into the new quarters during Intersession and classes were conducted there during the 1969 summer session.”

The Main Library was renamed the Herman B. Wells Library in 2005.

New Space in Luddy Hall

As of the Spring Semester, 2018, the Department of Information & Library Science is now housed in Luddy Hall, the newly constructed building for the School of Informatics, Computing, and Engineering on the north side of IU Bloomington’s campus. Located at 700 N. Woodlawn Avenue, the four story building joins together ILS along with the Computer Science and Engineering Departments and the School’s Career and IT Services. ILS is on the second floor in a suite with offices for faculty and staff and Ph.D. student workstations. Courses for the spring will be held either in one of the three computer labs or seven classrooms in the building. ILS colloquiaums and other events will now take place in the new 160 seat auditorium. All of our students will have access to the rest of the 124,000-square-foot innovative space. Save the date for the opening week festivities April 9-13, 2018!
An Inside Look at ILS Internships

The Master of Library Science program requires that all of its students complete at least a 3 credit internship as part of their core requirements. While not a requirement for the Master of Information Science, many also choose to complete an internship to gain further experience prior to graduation. Here is a brief snapshot of recent internship sites:

Summer 2017

36 interns from the MLS and MIS programs spent the summer interning all over the U.S., including processing collections in the Music Division at the Library of Congress, cataloging gardens and rehousing archival records at the Smithsonian Gardens, connecting disjointed film reels at the Yale Film Study, and working as a third party security team doing risk management at General Electric Corp. MLS student Ashley Hosbach spent her summer at the Brooklyn Historical Society’s Othmer Library and Archives in New York City, where she worked in the Reference and Collection Development departments on collections dating back to the 1600s (photo A).

Fall 2017

This Fall, 15 students interned at locations around Bloomington and Indiana, including the Greenwood Public Library, Glenn A Black Laboratory, Lilly Library, DePauw University, and Hussey Mayfield Memorial Public Library, and Brown County High School. MLS student Elsie Smith, who wants to work in public libraries after graduating, said that helping to develop some of the music and adult fiction collections at the Monroe County Public Library were amongst some of the highlights of her internship (photos B & C).

The new Professionals in Practice series, initiated by ILS Chair Ron Day, is designed to bring ILS alumni to campus to talk with students about their experiences post-graduation and share what they do now. They will also join us to offer advice for current ILS students as they prepare to complete their degrees and enter the field. This past fall featured Erin Dobias, who graduated in 2009 and Mara Inglezakis Owens, who graduated in 2015. This will be an ongoing series; the next talk will be on January 12, 2019 and will feature Emilee Mathews. Emilee, a 2011 alumna who is now the Research Librarian for Art & Visual Studies at UC Irvine, will be the new Art Librarianship Specialization advisor for ILS and will teach an online art librarianship course for ILS students.

On October 16th, Erin Dobias (’09) came back from Google to visit IU. In her talk for the Professionals in Practice Series, she described her work as a data analyst at Google in the Silicon Valley. She touched on several areas of her library training at IU that led her to her work, such as her work at the Lilly Library. Ms. Dobias also discussed how the array of instruction she received from her classes at IU helps her every day at Google, from being able to communicate effectively with her software engineer colleagues to the use of information philosophy in cataloging. Ms. Dobias also talked about the working environment at Google, the perks, and the interviewing process that she went through.

ILS alumna Mara Inglezakis Owens (’15) works for SPS Commerce and was also looking to recruit for her employer during her visit. Mara spoke with current students in her talk on October 13th about finding the right profession and the basic recipe for professional success, sharing her journey of leaving her doctoral program to get her MLS, the challenges she faced in looking for jobs post-graduation, and how it all lead to her current successes at SPS Commerce. Her background and interests in knowledge management and behavior science translated to her current career that has morphed from taxonomy to data architecture to her present position, and self-described best-fit, research and development.
Walker Byer works in processing collections at the University Archive, where he worked on an exhibit which looks at the history of the Folklore Institute at Indiana University Bloomington. The exhibit includes artifacts from various research projects conducted throughout the years. Another part of the exhibit is dedicated to folktales and legends on the IU campus. Walker will graduate in December 2017 with a MLS, Archives Specialization and hopes to continue to do archival work and rare book curation.

Xiaohong Chen published two articles:

Tyler Davis gave a talk entitled, “Archiving IU Social Media with Archive-It,” with Archivist Molly Wittenberg for the IU as part of the Scholars’ Commons Digital Brown Bag Series.

Catherine Fonseca co-authored a poster presentation entitled “Attempt, Assess, Repeat: Piloting a Pop-up Library Initiative Across Campus” at the LOEX Annual Conference, Lexington, KY. May 11th-13th, 2017. Other accomplishments:
- Summer 2017 Tinker Field Research Grant for travel to Mexico City
- Indiana Library Federation (ILF) Conference Attendance Student Scholarship
- 2018 IU International Partnership Exchange Fellowship at Universidad Nacional Autónoma de México (UNAM) in Mexico City in completion of Master’s Thesis, tentatively titled “Undressing Marianismo: Representations of the Female in Mexican Erotic Comics.”

ILS’s Own Devan Donaldson & UNC-Chapel Hill’s Neal Thomas Presents Research at the ILS Colloquium

On Friday, December 1, 2017, Dr. Devan Ray Donaldson, Assistant Professor of Information Science, gave a presentation on one of his most recent research projects as part of the ILS Colloquium series. His talk entitled, “The Perceived Benefits of Acquiring Data Seals of Approval,” examined the perceived benefits of audit and certification by those who are certified by the Data Seal of Approval. He found that his participants enjoyed each of the benefits that the DSA board promised. Additionally, he identified two more benefits of acquiring DSAs that are not explicitly listed on the DSA website: documentation and assurance. The former refers to the benefit of identifying gaps in the documentation of repository workflows and filling those gaps by recording information to make tacit knowledge explicit. The latter refers to the benefit of knowing that staff members are managing their digital repositories in conformance with best practice. A report of the findings related to the talk was just recently published in the International Journal of Digital Curation Volume 12, Number 1: https://doi.org/10.2218/ijdc.v12i1.481.

Neal Thomas of the Department of Communication at the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill gave a talk sponsored by the Rob Kling Center for Social Informatics, the ILS Colloquium series, and the IU Consortium for the Study of Religion, Ethics, and Society’s Seminar on Information, Ethics, and Sociocultural Values, entitled “Future Collectivity and the Graph Relation.” In his talk, Thomas discussed knowledge, social, and predictive graphs on the internet, their philosophical antecedents and their relation to different philosophies of language. Thomas’s book, Becoming-Social in a Networked Age is due out with Routledge by the end of the year.

ILS’s new Strategic Plan, drawn up in response to the dean’s request from all SICE departments, was approved in August. It features a renewed emphasis upon digital documents and their preservation, organization, and access within sociotechnical systems, and their understanding from information, media, and communication perspectives.

Assistant Professor Devan Donaldson attended the Indiana Library Federation conference in Indianapolis for several days, and I joined him for the alumni reception during the conference. Donaldson has represented ILS at other events, such as the ALA conferences.

Finally, as I write we are all preparing for our move into the new building, Luddy Hall. Katie, Carol, and SICE alumni relations officer, Mary Beth Roska, have been busy preparing for the move and having ILS participating in the celebration.

I’d like to thank our staff and our full time and adjunct faculty for always trying to move ILS further in supporting our students and our professions. I am deeply grateful for the dedicated and forward-looking individuals with whom I have the honor of working with every day, and the terrific students who are our future leaders. Thank you, each and every one of you, and best wishes for the new year.

Ron Day, ILS Dept. Chair
Phil Bantin Retires from Teaching ILS Classes

Phil Bantin has announced that Fall 2017 is to be his last semester teaching courses for ILS. Since 2000, he has been an Adjunct Professor with the Department; in 2001 he created the Archives & Records Management Specialization and was director, advisor, and course instructor of the required classes for the specialization. He retired as Librarian and the Director of IU University Archives and Records Management in 2014 but was still active in ILS. IU alumna Allison McClanahan shared, “I enjoyed all of the classes that I was able to take with [Phil], learning about archival theory, ethics, appraising archival records, electronic records management. Adding the archives specialization, and the knowledge learned in your courses, definitely contributed to my career at the Archives of Traditional Music.” Fellow students Tyler Davis, Sara Stefani, Mikala Narlock, and Laura Bell all echoed what current student Sarah Rogers said, “Thank you for making each class session fun, informative, and inspiring. This semester with you, your final semester at IU, was my best semester as a graduate student in the Archives & Records Management specialization.” On behalf of the Department, ILS Chair Ron Day sends our warm appreciation to Phil for all his work for our students and the profession over so many years. Enjoy your retirement (again!).

Taemin Park Retires as Librarian and Adjunct Professor

Taemin Park, who has been teaching with ILS since 1995, retired this fall from teaching ILS courses and from her position as a Librarian in IU Bloomington Libraries. An alumna of the Department, she got her MLS in 1982 and began working the next year in the libraries. She mainly taught Cataloging, Advanced Cataloging, and Online Searching and supervised many reading, research, and internships over the years. Fellow Adjunct Professor and Librarian Andrea Morrison had this to say to Taemin: “your professional career has been a model in dedication to cataloging education, research, service, and professional librarianship. You have been a wonderful mentor to students, interns, and colleagues; you shared your curriculum and research skills very generously over the years and your influence has had a global impact.” Alumna Michelle Hahn, who is now the sound recordings cataloging Librarian in the IU William & Gayle Cook Music Library, said that she had never intended on being a cataloger, but “as a result of Taemin, the [Advanced Cataloguing] class, the internship, and the job market, [she] did go out into the world to catalog.” Fellow alumni Krystie Herndon, Melissa Cookson, Wendy Hardenberg, and Anne E. McKee also communicated their appreciation of Taemin and her teaching. The Department thanks Taemin for all her many years of dedicated service and wishes her the best in her retirement and future plans for spending time with her five grandchildren in Maryland.
ILS Student Group Activities from Fall 2017

Society of American Archivists (SAA)
The SAA Student Chapter has offered several tours of archives and repositories around campus this fall to help new students gain a sense of the opportunities for learning and working in the area. They plan to continue this and hopefully offer more tours. In early December SAA hosted a Professionals Round Table with archives and special libraries professionals from around campus. This was a great opportunity for anyone interested in archives, special collections, or records management to meet working professionals, ask questions, and learn more about various career paths. In January, SAA-SC plans to host another workshop event similar to the conference they hosted last year. This year however, they will partner with other Student Organizations to offer more workshops on even more topics. Please save the date for January 26!

Special Libraries Association Student Group (SLA-SG)
This semester, SLA-SG led library tours and networking with librarians across Bloomington. In particular, they connected with the Monroe County Public Library, IU’s Moving Image Archive and the Kinsey Institute Library and Special Collections. These partnerships provided their members with volunteer opportunities and student positions. Next semester they will continue the Bloomington tour series and will have a variety of workshops planned with the SICE Career Office. Stay tuned!
Zheng Gao received the ILS Ph.D. travel award to present research at the Text Retrieval Conference (TREC) 2017 in Gaithersburg, MD.

John Henry Adams received the ILS Masters Travel Scholarship to attend the Charleston Library Conference where he will present as part of Arizona State’s “Future of the Academic Library Print Collection” project. The project was focused on improving student engagement by developing a more focused approach to open collections: after a workshop and some research, they concluded that libraries should shift towards a largely closed stack model with the open stacks being more in the vein of curated collections. They will be presenting some of their findings in a talk and a seminar at the Charleston Conference; John will be there as one of the co-authors of the whitepaper.

Shawn Martin received the Doctoral Research Forum presentation award and the ILS Ph.D. travel award to present his research at the Association for Information Science and Technology (ASIS&T) annual meeting in Arlington, VA.

Chase McCoy received the ILS Ph.D. travel award, the Doctoral Research Forum presentation award, and the Rob Kling Center for Social Informatics Graduate Student travel award to present a paper and poster co-authored with Dr. Howard Rosenbaum at the ASIS&T 2017 Conference in Washington, D.C.

Mallory Nygard received the Alva J. Field Memorial Scholarship and the 2017 Sarah Rebecca Reed Scholarship, presented by the Beta Phi Mu International Library and Information Studies Honor Society.

Sarah Rogers spent 10 weeks at the NASA Langley Research Center in Hampton, VA to help them assess their archival needs. She produced a 10 page report for center leadership advocating for the investment in a formal archives and a full-time permanent archivist after surveying their collections, interviewing employees, and speaking with archivists at other NASA centers. She was there during NASA Langley’s 100th year celebration, where she was fortunate to meet Katherine Johnson, one of the women whose story was told in the book Hidden Figures.

Karen Timko accepted the Monographic Cataloger position in the Monographic Text Cataloging unit at IUB. Karen previously worked in Wells Library Technical Services under Lisa Lent in Monographic Acquisitions. She also worked as a Senior Collections/Reference Assistant under Wookjin Cheun in Area Studies.

Chenwei Zheng received the ILS Ph.D. travel award to present research at the 11th ACM Conference on Recommender Systems conference in Italy.

Fall 2017
Incoming Class

The incoming class of Fall 2017 included 38 MLS, 11 MIS, 1 PhD, and 2 Non-Degree seeking, with students originating from many different countries including China, India, and Korea. The range of student degrees prior to coming to ILS varies from humanities, liberal arts, music, biology, linguistics, classics, and IT, with many coming straight from their bachelor’s and others who even completed a Ph.D. Specializations with the largest interest were Rare Books, Archives and Records Management, and Music Librarianship; other students expressed interests in Social Informatics, Political Science, Public Librarianship, and six students are looking to complete dual degrees.

New student Ryan Johnson (far left) has already gotten involved in activities around ILS and IU. He has joined the Student Music Librarianship Group and is their representative on the ILS Student Advisory Council. A native of Jeffersonville, Indiana, he graduated from the University of Louisville with a degree in music performance. While there, he worked in the music library on campus and enjoyed making music materials accessible to others. After expressing an interest in pursuing music librarianship as a possible career choice to his mentors (both alumni of the program), they suggested he apply for the music librarianship program at ILS. He currently works at the William and Gayle Cook Music Library and the Archives of Traditional Music and, so far, his favorite courses have been Music Bibliography and Representation and Organization. To him, the best part of the program has been learning practical knowledge and then applying what he has learned to his current jobs.
Accreditation Update

The Master of Library Science program and the Master of Information Science program are accredited by the American Library Association (ALA) Committee on Accreditation, with the status of continued accreditation. The next comprehensive review visit has been scheduled for March 4th-5th, 2019. The ILS faculty are currently writing the report and gathering data to submit the Self-Study Report to the ALA Office for Accreditation along with the External Review Panel.

As part of the preparation for the Self-Study, Former Dean & Chair Debora “Ralf” Shaw, who is on the Accreditation Steering Committee, formed the following ILS Advisory Committee for Professional Programs. The Committee will review the ILS mission, goals, student learning outcome statements, and the draft of the Self-Study.

Update from ILS Adjunct Lecturers

In Fall 2017, ILS welcomed two new adjuncts, Melissa Bruecks and Grant Simpson, and said goodbye to Craig Simpson.

Grant Simpson graduated in Spring 2017 with a Ph.D. in both Information Science and English and a graduate area certificate in English and Germanic Philology. His dissertation is called “Computing the English Middle Ages: A Sociotechnical Study of Medievalists’ Engagement with Digital Humanities,” and it investigates three case studies in the area of digital medieval research. In addition to teaching the course Information Architecture for the Web for ILS, Grant works with the University Information Technology Services as a Principal Software Engineer.

Craig Simpson is leaving the IU Libraries and his position as an ILS Adjunct Lecturer to take the position as Head of Special Collections & Archives at San José State University. Thanks, Craig for your work teaching ILS students in the Process Manuscript Collections course!
